Renée Register Interview - Metadata and the Publishing Industry - Renée Register Interview - Metadata and the Publishing Industry by Anne Hill Streamed 10 years ago 20 minutes - I talk with Renée Register of datacurate.com, co-author of The Metadata Handbook., about the complex metadata, issues in book ...

Renée's background in library science, and non-traditional librarian career with Ingram and OCLC

The duplication of effort between vendors and libraries. Libraries are starting to move away from MARC and toward a data structure that is more sharable

Starting in the 90s, publishers realized they needed to change their metadata. The process is speeding up even more now, with the need for a standard way to share metadata so it can be used across multiple systems

The problem of metadata silos and how to overcome them

From the ONIX standard to proprietary databases, and duplication of effort

Publisher concerns about what happens to metadata downstream. Renée talks about her upcoming panel at BEA with Ingram, Baker \u0026 Taylor, Bowker, and Barnes \u0026 Noble. Is it possible to have one database that everyone pulls from?

There's money in selling books but there's also money in the data itself, so it may be hard to come to agreement

Dialogue and communication the first step to achieving industry-wide solutions. Legacy systems impeding progress, and workflows that don't use current standards.

Options for small publishers (5-10 titles per year) that need more control over metadata: using Bowker, then OnixEdit, Firebrand, NetRead

The BEA Panel: looking at their operations and find the things they change most often and whether that gets communicated back to the publishers. A Truth and Reconciliation process for the industry?
